“It seems an unusual problem to have in the current economic climate, but our business is continuing to grow and we are struggling to find enough outgoing, enthusiastic people to assist in providing excellent service in our car showrooms,” explained Andy Coulthurst, Group Sales Director of JCT600.

“We offer a competitive package, including a company car, and we’re happy to talk to people who have no previous experience of the motor industry or even sales. The main skills needed are an ability to listen to people, demonstrate fantastic products and the potential to learn and work hard; we will provide all of the necessary sales training.

“We are not necessarily looking only for seasoned sales professionals- a candidate that is presentable, confident and able to work flexible hours but with experience from a different industry could easily fit into one of our sales teams and rise to a new challenge.”

One of JCT600’s recent success stories is 48 year old Gary Mouatt who joined the company two years ago after spending 20 years working in a dry cleaning business. Following a successful spell as a Sales Executive he has recently progressed into management after completing his business management training and has been promoted to Business Manager JCT600 Peugeot Menston.

Andy continued: “The variety of Sales Executives at JCT600 is wide, reflecting our customer base. We have both young and old and male and female sales executives, some with lots of experience and some new to the industry. There is no prescriptive formula for the right person to sell new and used cars, other than a love for dealing with people.”
