

DELOITTE

15 June 2009

PARTNER PROMOTIONS AT DELOITTE

Business advisory firm Deloitte is bucking the trend of the market and growing its Leeds tax practice to meet increasing demand from clients.

International and corporate tax specialist Nick Marsden, based in the Leeds office, is promoted to partner. He advises UK companies and groups that are owned by foreign parented companies, particularly US and European inbounds, and is one of 23 new partner appointments in the UK, eight of them from senior tax specialists to partners.

Sue Holmes, a corporate tax specialist who is also based in Leeds, becomes an associate partner. She leads the Financial Services tax practice in the North, advising on a wide variety of tax issues for retail banks, building societies, insurers and investment and wealth management in businesses.

Senior partner Geoff Taylor said the tax practice was not only holding firm in the regional market but while others were standing still it was growing.

“It is most definitely bucking the trend with one of the best teams in Leeds,” he added. “The appointments underline the fact that Deloitte is a business that invests in its own people and focuses on promoting from within, offering new opportunities and career pathways.” Ends

Photography: Newly promoted partner Nick Marsden and associate partner Sue Holmes, both based in the Leeds office of Deloitte.